

Children can also communicate via skype, which is very exciting for them once they have established relationships through exchanges of letters. English is taught in Belarus, but some of the children are not very confident to speak so the project coordinator translates for them

Right: Katya and Yulia from Belarus make models of Tower Bridge using marshmallows and toothpicks.

Through schools twinning projects like this one, children from this small and under-resourced community and children from the UK have the opportunity to learn about each other's lives, cultures and different Jewish experiences. In this way they can establish a mutual understanding and respect for each other. This project can be a supportive and nurturing experience for all the children involved, who gain a huge amount from sharing their lives.
